IN THIS ISSUE

2017 Gabr Fellowship is almost here With the selection of the US and Egyptian Fellows now fully completed, we here at the Foundation are looking forward to welcoming them in Egypt on September 21st.

This year's exchange program shall take place between Thursday, 21 September – Saturday, 30 September in Egypt and will then migrate to the U.S. from Saturday, 21 October – Saturday 28 October.

Selecting the Fellows is a journey in itself – and this year, we have had a large number of excellent applicants. I have enjoyed personally meeting every single final candidate, and believe the 2017 cohort is a testimony to the quality of emerging American and Egyptian leaders.

I would like to thank all the previous years' Fellows that have participated in the interviews and contributed their valued opinions on the candidates.

As we finish the final preparations for the upcoming program, it is my pleasure to introduce to you the new cohort of the 2017 Gabr Fellowship Program, and share with you a taste of the upcoming Egypt trip.

Major Andy Andersen swears in 2016 Fellow John Ryan

Major Andersen of the U.S. Army swore 2016 Gabr Fellow John Ryan as a First Lieutenant in the U.S. Army, on Thursday, August 3, with Senator Robert Menendez of New Jersey, a former boss of John, holding the U.S. Constitution.

Gabr Fellows Meet with Chairman Gabr at ARTOC Headquarters

Cairo, Wednesday 30 August 2017

On Wednesday 30 August 2017, Mr. Shafik Gabr hosted the Gabr Fellows in the ARTOC Headquarters in Mokkatam, Cairo.

Present in the meeting were twenty-two Fellows including a part of the 2017 cohort who have yet to embark on their East-West journey.

Among the topics discussed were Artificial Intelligence, Biogenetics, Cyber, and the future of banking. The Fellows engaged in lively and productive debate regarding Egypt's economic status and US-Egypt relations in the wake of the recent US aid cuts to Egypt.

Chairman Shafik Gabr to be honoured by the London Center for Policy Research

The London Center for Policy Research, a well-renowned foreign policy and national security think tank, has over the past five years recognized contributors to America's national security for their leadership in promoting and protecting the fundamental principles on which the US was founded.

This year, for the first time, the prestigious American Liberty Award shall be bestowed on a non-American, Mr. M. Shafik Gabr, who shall be honoured with the Policy Direction and Leadership Award for his efforts in promoting US national security principles via building bridges on a mutually beneficial basis with nations of critical importance to the US.

I feared America

by Basma El Baz (2015 Fellow)

Basma El Baz, 2015 Gabr Fellow, writes about her experience travelling to the United States for the first time with the Gabr Fellowship.

Basma contributed an article to HuffPost Travel Blog talking about her experience and her fears of going to the United States, and she tells the story of how the Gabr Fellowship has changed her life:

I love traveling. I visited various countries alone or in the company of my best friend. I did not feel any fear before visiting the United Kingdom or Italy or Jordan, many countries were on my list but the only country I dreaded visiting was the United States. I tried to avoid visiting America as much as I can out of fear of being treated differently for being a Muslim Arab woman. But I decided to apply to Shafik Gabr Fellowship which had a goal of bridging the gap of communication between the East & West. I witnessed this gap of misunderstanding not only through the statements of officials and politicians round the world, but also it was reflected in the western media. I've read many stories portraying all Muslims as evil people and read many misleading articles about my dear country Egypt, either by generalizing the uncommon or by telling only one side of the story. I was frustrated and I wanted to do something but I did not know what till I saw the ad for this Fellowship, so I applied. I wanted to know the other side and let the other side know me.

New program draws Egyptian women to tech

by Menna Farouk (2017 Fellow)

An Egyptian tech school is shattering stereotyping in the tech industry by enabling more women to learn programming, coding and elements of building websites.

AlMakinah, a Cairo-based tech school, has initiated a new program exclusively for women titled "The Women in Tech Track" with the aim of addressing the imbalances in the gender ratio in Egypt's tech industry. "The program includes sessions on front-end web development, data visualization, digital marketing as well as workshops on confidence and resilience and talks by industry experts about the tech field," Hoda Hamad, the manager of the program, told Al-Monitor.

Hamad was a participant in one of AlMakinah's tech classes. After noticing that the AlMakinah classes were mostly dominated by men, she decided to join the school's team and launch a program for women "to rebrand the field and remove any social stereotypes set by society." "In our last full-stack program, we only had four girls in the class. I was one of them. And after attending this class, I decided to change that," she said.

There is now a class of 17 bright women, 15-36 years old, from different educational and economic backgrounds. "They are currently learning front-end web development. They started on Aug. 20 and the program will go until Aug. 31," she noted.

AlMakinah was launched two years ago to bridge the gap between the requirements tech companies seek from employees and the skills job seekers possess. Since then, the tech school has launched several programs that teach web development in a practical way that satisfies the needs of the companies looking to hire new people.
